

WHEN NOTHING'S RIGHT

A Novel

Andrina V. Reynolds

Kaya is a sophomore in High School who is just trying to find a way back to her old life. None of her friends or classmates suspect the real reason for her absence over the past few months; the reasons why every day is a struggle and why the last thing she wants to do is let someone get close to her. But when a new student enters her life the darkness that constantly surrounds her begins to shift. Suddenly Kaya finds herself being torn between her darkest urges and the need to share her story. Could Tim be the key to her old self?

Prologue

Death is easy, peaceful even. Life is just so much harder. With this in mind, I took a deep breath and dragged the blade across my wrist in one swift movement, watching the blood flow out, seeing it drip down my arm and slowly form a puddle on the black and white tiled kitchen floor. I turned on the water faucet and held my arm under the burning stream of hot water. Ignoring the pain, just focusing on what was ahead: relief, escape, the end.
